The 4 page 60 minute ESL British English lesson – 10/11/15

What is the most satisfying job in the world?

What is the most satisfying job in the world? There are probably many answers. This English lesson will explore a few of them.

You might think being President of the United States or being the British Prime Minister are two of the most satisfying jobs in the world.

Teaching or working in a bank could be equally satisfying. Perhaps not, as the former sees too many teachers quit the profession and in the latter, one just earns a living!

Probably the most satisfying jobs in the world are where you help people, for example, in a hospital, where lives can be saved. You could be a doctor, a nurse or even a cleaner at the hospital. Another similar satisfying job is helping old people in a care home.

Some people are very good with their hands. They might argue that the most satisfying job in the world is working in a factory, perhaps carpet making, or building a car (yes, robots have replaced some of the skills in both jobs). These days, laptop boys and girls in offices might say programming is the most satisfying job.

All this does beg the question why do we work? To earn money to live is the simple answer. The job is what you make it. Generally, people like meaningful work that offers variety, skill development, complexity and growth. On the job training is always useful.

Perhaps the most satisfying job in the world was the one in Australia where you had to look after an island on the Great Barrier Reef. You entertained a few tourists who visited it; made a few digital videos, interacted on various webpages and enjoyed the wonderful Australian weather whilst getting a good tan. Strewth!

SPEAKING – WARM UP

Think of three satisfying jobs in the world. Go round the room swapping details with others.

LISTENING – WRITING - DICTATION

The teacher will read some lines of the article slowly to the class.

READING

Students should now read the article aloud, swapping readers every paragraph.
