Remembering David Bowie

Today let's talk about music legend David Bowie. The singer died in New York on the 10th January 2016 at the age of 69 following an 18 month battle with liver cancer.

Bowie had kept his illness a secret from his fans; only his family and a few close friends actually knew. He told them that he wanted to be remembered for the good times and his music. Shortly after his death he was secretly cremated in New York without any of his family or friends present 'without fuss' – no big show, no fan-fare.

Bowie's new album Blackstar was released just days before his death. It has been described as a memorial for his fans. The song 'Blackstar' is now widely interpreted as a premonition of his impending death with the haunting lyrics, 'Look up here, I'm in heaven'.

Following Bowie's death fans have been buying his albums in droves. A quarter of the UK Top 40 Album Chart was soon occupied by the legendary singer and musician.

Born David Robert Jones in 1947, he adopted the name David Bowie in 1965. Pre-Bowie in 1963, he was in a band called the Konrads.

Bowie's best known creation was the fictional Ziggy Stardust who performed with the Spiders from Mars. Classic Bowie hits include the legendary 'Space Oddity', 'The Jean Genie', 'Young Americans', 'Heroes', 'Under Pressure', which he sang with Queen, 'Ziggy Stardust', 'Starman', 'Rebel Rebel', 'Fashion', 'Ashes to Ashes', 'Let's Dance', 'Sound and Vision', 'Modern Love', and 'Changes'.

Bowie was a music legend who over four decades constantly reinvented himself. He will be remembered by many for being theatrical and flamboyant. He was a showman who will inspire generations to come. Major Tom would be proud.
