The 4 page 60 minute ESL British English lesson – 15/04/13

Ding Dong over Anti-Thatcher song - Saturday 13th April 2013

Following Margaret Thatcher's death, protesters have propelled a song into the downloaded music charts called Ding Dong The Witch is Dead. The song from the movie The Wizard of Oz has caused a storm of protest across Britain; more so in the British press, to the point that the BBC decided at first to ban the song being played!

The BBC says the campaign promoting the song is "distasteful". They issued a statement: "The BBC finds this campaign distasteful but does not believe the record should be banned. On Sunday, the Radio 1 chart show will contain a news item explaining why it is in the charts. During this a short clip will be played, as it has been in some of our news programmes."

The banning of the song – many call it censorship by the BBC - is in today's world quite extraordinary. The BBC is historically famous for censoring and banning songs. In 1977, they refused to play The Sex Pistols and God Save The Queen. In 1983, they banned Frankie Goes To Hollywood and Relax.

By banning the song being broadcast fully has meant people have wanted to hear all of it! The result is Ding Dong The Witch is Dead has rapidly climbed the downloaded music charts all week. It is already in the top five and is likely to get to No 1. Not bad for a song that was first released in 1939! It will also be one of the shortest songs to get to the top of the charts.

Meanwhile supporters of Margaret Thatcher have released a rival song by the 1970s' punk band Notsensibles called I'm In Love with Margaret Thatcher. They are hoping that this tribute to her will reach the top of the charts. We will see! ***
(UPDATE - see page 4)
