

Celebrating May Day in Britain

May Day traditions in Britain include Morris dancing, the crowning of the May Queen and Maypole dancing.

Morris dancers normally perform on May Day. These are men wearing folk costumes and bell pads on their shins. They use sticks, swords and handkerchiefs that maybe wielded by the dancers during their dance.

The May Queen is a girl who must ride or walk at the front of a parade for May Day celebrations. She wears a white gown to symbolise purity and usually wears a tiara or crown. She is generally crowned by flowers and makes a speech ahead of any dancing taking place.

In England and Wales, Maypole dancing is normally performed by children. They dance around a Maypole holding ribbons. These are attached to the top of a wooden pole that is normally erected on a green. Many children learn the Maypole dance at school.

May Day in the UK is associated with towns and villages celebrating springtime fertility (of people, the livestock and the soil). There is revelry and village fetes, as well as community gatherings.

In Edinburgh, Scotland, tradition has it that young women who climb Arthur's Seat (a local mountain) and wash their faces in the morning dew at the top of it will have lifelong beauty.

International Workers' Day is celebrated in London on May 1st with trade union workers marching into Trafalgar Square to listen to various speeches.

In Europe, May Day or International Workers' Day is a public holiday. In England, the May Day public holiday waits until the first Monday of May.
